

CAPTAIN KIDD'S GOLD IS AGAIN BEING SOUGHT

Dredging Company Has Found Ancient Coins on a Shoal in the Lower Delaware River.

SKEPTICISM OF FISHERS

Shad Hauler's Views of Treasure in General and Some 160-Year-Old Whisky in Particular.

PHILADELPHIA, May 21.—An epidemic of "Captain Kidd fever" is about to break loose along the shores of the Delaware bay.

Years have passed since this devastating mauling swept the towns of Delaware and New Jersey that border on the broad stream where most of the untold wealth of the ancient pirate is supposed to have sunk into the sand and mud. Ever since that long-ago time the New Jersey and Delaware shores have been visited at intervals with the fever that causes men to dig and dig in the bottom of the bay until they have no more money to buy shovels.

According to conservative estimates, it takes more money to cure one epidemic of "Captain Kidd fever" than three visitations of smallpox.

But years have passed since it paid its last call, and the citizens of Salem, Pennsylvania, Delaware City and all the rest of the towns that go down to the bay to catch shad, thought that the memory of Captain Kidd and his gold was buried forever in good old Delaware mud.

No. 30. Like a thunderbolt out of a clear sky comes the news that the big scow of the American Dredging Company has been pumping up ancient silver coins out of Dan Baker Shoal, where the United States government is cutting out a deeper channel to Philadelphia.

The news first leaked out in Salem, which is situated three miles up the Salem river and a good nine from the shoals. It is not generally known yet, even in Salem, because, it is rumored, the few who got the first information are buying up all the tools to dig for the treasure of the wicked Mr. Kidd.

Of course, it must be the right ship, for the coins are said on very good authority to be Spanish, and Captain Kidd was said to be of Spanish blood because it was the least likely to be counterfeited. Those sucked up by the dredger's big pipe are also said to be of silver, but you can bet the gold is underneath, for it is well known that Capt. Kidd always carried his gold with old silver pieces, just so as to conceal how much he really had. He also had a practice of wrapping up a wad of $100 bills in an old $1 silver certificate when he counted change for a ransom.

Although the average citizen of New Jersey and Delaware is peculiarly susceptible to "Captain Kidd fever," the fisher folk, who dwell close to the bay and have seen so many cases of the fatal disease, have become immune. In fact, to a casual observer they treat treasure-hunting in a peculiarly blasé manner.

SHAD FISHERMAN'S TALE. Two of the best shad fishermen in Salem were drying their big gill net at the edge of Salem river when a reporter inquired to the best way of seeking for Captain Kidd's private gold.

"Well, I tell yer the truth," said the tall, bronzed captain of the beached smack, "I don't think there's much in it. An' I'll tell yer more, an' that is that I think that if all the money of Kidd was found it wouldn't make up what's been lost lookin' fer it."

"But what I dew think somebody might git is the money that was sunk in a big ship that sailed from Philadelphia about 30 years ago with $500,000 on board. She sunk in the bay."

"But, d'yer know, it's queer how 'er rivers and bays change about. Now, I'll bet that bay is nine miles from where it was when Kidd sailed up. I wouldn't ever might find it in that 'er farm over there fer all yer kin tell."

"An' that reminds me of a ship that was sunk in the Mississippi. She was an old steam paddle boat, and she went down 100 years ago with about 30 barrels of whisky, yer see."

"Well, then there Southerners jest naturally couldn't get a committee together, and they kinder never git up. Well, about ten years ago there was a pokin' hole in the river bottom where a fellow told me he'd say."

"Why, over there 'bout three mile 's where 'er river used to run, an' they went over and drew a red hell, and, by gosh, he hit 'er boat 'er third shot. 'So they drew and fetched up all them barrels of rum. An' say, d'yer know what it was like? Why, it was jest like oil. Just think! Rum 100 years old! I wouldn't try it. 'So, yer see, they might find sunthin' yet on old Dan Baker shoal. I wouldn't try it. Shad's bad enough. But here's luck to the feller that finds it!"

"What yer say? The government takes it if there's any treasure found. Oh, don't you worry about that. I think the government 'd git it if I saw it first or yer saw it first? Not much. Oh, no, if them fellers didn't keep it up, an' an' Uncle Sam'll never know nuthin' 'bout it. It was queer about that there rum, though. Kivered up 100 years."

Here an unusually bad angle in the big gill net took the shad fisher's undivided attention and the chapter on treasure seeking was ended.

WRECK ON THE SHOAL

But certainly something has been found on Dan Baker shoal, for Assistant Engineer Haskard, who is in charge of the work at the shoal, was in the city yesterday to see Major Sanborn about the removal of an old wreck which is right in the line of the new channel. It is near the surface and will be a dangerous obstruction unless removed. It is supposed from its location to be the original old brig from which Brig Buoy takes its name.

Mr. Haskard said that the treasure had not been found when he left the shoal, at 4 o'clock, on Friday afternoon, so that he knew nothing of it. It may all be true, he said, for there are four old wrecks in close proximity to the Brig buoy. Three of them are so completely covered by mud and salt that it is impossible to tell what they are. Just how long ago they were sunk, it is quite possible to think, that some old Spanish ship from the isthmus of the West Indies, driven by stress of weather into the coast, had sought shelter in the bay. The spirit of adventure and fondness for exploration of the old navigators may have induced them to sail up the river. The ship might have been stranded and the crew might have fallen victims to the savages who roamed along the border of the stream at that time.

The story that Captain Kidd sunk a vessel, treasure laden, in the river is a well-known legend on the lower river. No one has ever been able to learn just where the pirate's ship was wrecked, and it may as well have been at Dan Baker shoals as at any other point.

Wherever the treasure comes from Mr. Haskard says it will, if recovered by the dredges, be turned over to the government.

PARISIANS EXCITED OVER SIGHT OF YANKEE GOLD

Great Crowd Watches Transfer of 178 Barrels of Yellow Metal, Worth $9,000,000.

PARIS, May 21.—The arrival of enormous quantities of American gold in payment of the Panama canal purchase excites the wonderment of the Parisians. A large crowd gathered at the St. Lazare Railroad station here to see the freight train of four cars, carrying 178 barrels of gold, being a shipment of $9,000,000 by the French line steamer Lorraine, which arrived at Havre on Thursday from New York. The excitement was such that the police feared it would be necessary to summon reinforcements, but it all passed off well. The precious cargo was safely conveyed to the strong rooms of the Credit Lyonnais. A large force of gendarmes guarded the quays at Havre while the barrels of gold were rolled off and each freight car carried several who remained with the barrels until the gold was turned over to the Credit Lyonnais.

WILLIAM M. CHASE THE GUEST AT ART INSTITUTE

Famous Artist Delivers an Address at Meeting of the Contemporary Club.

A reception was tendered yesterday afternoon from 4 to 6 p. m. by the Art Association of Indianapolis at the John Herron Art Institute in honor of William M. Chase, of New York, one of the best-known artists in America. Many took advantage of the opportunity to meet Mr. Chase, and the reception was a most pleasant and successful affair.

At the meeting of the Contemporary Club held last night at the Proprietary, Mr. Chase delivered an address on the life and character of the famous American artist, Whistler, with whom Mr. Chase was intimately acquainted. The general sentiment of the club was that this address far surpassed any that has been delivered before the club for many years. The intense interest in which Mr. Chase held his audience proved his power as a speaker, and frequent outbursts of laughter proved the catchiness of his wit.

The address was replete with personal reminiscences. The lecturer told of the time when one of Whistler's pupils came up to his teacher and asked: "Should you not point nature as you see it?" "That is a good rule to follow as long as you do not paint nature as you see it," with emphasis on the second person, the master replied. Mr. Chase spoke on Whistler in the highest terms and called him "the ideal artist." After the lecture was over Mr. Chase answered questions about Whistler and many other well-known painters.

At the evening meeting the election of the following officers was announced: President, Charles W. Moore; Vice President, Mrs. W. Wright Sowell; Second Vice President, Morris Ross; Third Vice President, Miss Florence M. Baker; Secretary, J. Kendall; Treasurer, William L. Elder. The following directors were chosen: Mrs. Franz H. Colgan, H. U. Brown, Miss Mary E. Colgan, the Rev. M. L. Haines, Miss Caroline H. Howland, Hugh McK. Landrum, Meredith H. Smith, Miss Louise Shipp, Mrs. Lucius B. Swift and Mrs. Henry L. Van Hoff.

THANKSGIVING FEAST SENDS MEN TO JAIL

Police Make String of Arrests After Rounding Up One Prisoner.

One-half dozen turkeys, which, it is alleged, were stolen last Thanksgiving by Obe Dean, 549 East Court street, landed four men in jail last night. Ever since November, 1903, when the turkeys were stolen from a butcher wagon in the rear of Shover's stable, on East Washburn street, the police have been looking for Dean, who left the city immediately after the theft.

He returned to Indianapolis yesterday, and was taken in custody by Patrolmen Shine and Al. Smith. On their way to the police station three other prisoners were gathered in. At East and Washington streets Lee Clark, 525 East Washington street, and Hence Wilson, 82 Elm street, were having a fight. "Hold the prisoner!" cried Shine, and, hurrying to the scene of action, he arrested the belligerents. At this time Louis Madden, a bystander, interfered, telling the men to stop. He had arrested the wrong men. Just to be sure Shine then arrested Madden, who charged him with interfering with an officer.

ATTORNEY EMDHART HAS NARROW ESCAPE

Young Man Almost Overcome by Artificial Gas in His Bathroom.

Adolph Emdhardt, a well-known young German attorney, was nearly overcome by artificial gas while taking a bath yesterday afternoon. He was found in an unconscious condition by his wife, who called Dr. Schaefer. The physician worked for several hours before the young man returned to consciousness. His family was very much alarmed, as it was thought for a while that he would not recover. He was pronounced out of danger by Dr. Schaefer late in the evening. Mr. Emdhardt lives at 305 East street. It is thought that there was a leak in the gas main from which the water for the house is heated, and this escaped into the bathroom.

WIFE ASKS POLICE TO SAVE HUSBAND'S LIFE

Mrs. Eugene Krumb, 410 East St. Clair street, has asked the police to prevent her husband from committing suicide. She telephoned to the desk sergeant saying that her husband, who had been drinking heavily, left home early in the evening, vowing to end his life as soon as possible. He went west on St. Clair street and has not been seen since. Two patrolmen were sent to trace the man, but at a late hour had not found him.
